

It is probable that around 850 children are buried in unmarked graves on the Bessborough site. No one knows exactly where though, as there has been no commitment to excavate the site, as is being done in Tuam. How can permission be granted for apartments on a site where small children were buried, children that died in circumstances that probably warranted criminal investigation, but now they don't even deserve to be undisturbed in death? We can literally concrete over the sufferings of children and the injustices of their deaths, in the face of many of their relatives who are very much alive, or planning permission for this project can be retracted. How in good conscience can this project proceed?
