A Chair

I object to the building of industrial wind turbines in an area that is celebrated in poem and song. If you build a massive structure that is 550ft (approx) on a hill undulating from 720ft to 1150ft, it draws the eye, distracts from the beauty and affects the peace of mind. People come to this area to relax, turbines are visually disturbing. Instead of the WHW (wild Atlantic way) it will stand for "robot awful windfarm" or "what a waste". Turbines have already been turned down on this ridge of hills several years ago, they were then far smaller. Hopefully these will be turned down too. We are being overwhelmed by applications of this type in the area. I feel it would be tragic to trash the hills for little gain. They are unsuitable, create environmental damage and are economically inefficient. Hundreds of families would have to live with them. All roads leading into Bantay bog would be framed by these turbines. Is this essential.
