1 Introduction

In this report increased lifetime of wind energy converter (WEC) Enercon E-70 E4, hub height 85 m at site Castledockrell will be predicted using fatigue load calculations with environment turbulence and lower mean wind speed compared to the mean wind speed and turbulence used for WEC design.

Using the aeroelastic code ADCoS [2], version 2.79, the WEC Enercon E-70 E4 will be modelled using a generic aeroelastic model with same dynamic behavior of real turbine. Therefore all WEC data for a complete aeroelastic simulation (tower top mass, rotor mass, rated speed, natural frequencies aerodynamic data etc.) are available.

According to IEC 61400 [5] for both configurations (design and site) stochastic wind fields are modelled using the 3-dimensional Kaimal turbulence model.

For various wind speeds (5 m/s –25 m/s) and turbulences aeroelastic calculations are done and fatigue load spectra are determined. These loads are compared to the loads calculated for the design wind conditions. The brief analysis is based on a reduced number of simulations and the evaluation is not carried out at component level.

For the site the mean wind speed, design equivalent turbulences and distribution of wind direction are given for each turbine [3], [4].

A higher turbulence intensity at site compared to the turbulence used for the load assessment doesn't mean inevitably a risk due to stability. If the annual mean wind speed is lower than the design mean wind speed, the exceedance of turbulence can be accepted. This has to be verified by site specific dynamic load calculations.

The service life determined below only provides a guide value for the expected stability with a lower degree of accuracy and should not be considered sufficient for a stability verification at component level and for official authorities.

Disclaimer: This document is a theoretical estimate and does not take into account the actual condition of individual wind turbine components.
For a complete life extension certification, inspections must be carried out on all structural components of all wind turbines. A life extension certification report is then drawn up.

Average wind speed at site ([3])	8,7 m/s

3 Calculations

Load spectra for various WTC components are calculated using the aeroelastic software „ADCoS“ Release 2.79 developed by Aero Dynamik Consult GmbH. According to IEC 61400 [5] for site Castledockrell stochastic wind fields are modelled using the 3-dimensional Kaimal turbulence model.

3.1 Design loads

For the design loads the turbulence intensity according IEC Class A is taken using the Weibull distribution given in Table 1. These loads are compared to loads at site.

3.2 Site specific loads

Castledockrell wind farm comprises of 18 wind turbines in total. The design equivalent turbulence as well as the mean wind speed is given in [3] table 2.9. Wind direction distribution is given in [4].

3.3 Comparison of design and site specific conditions

3.3.1 Design equivalent turbulence intensities

The following figure shows the design equivalent turbulence intensities for the 18 considered E-70 E4 turbines. [3].

3.3.3 Probability distribution

The design and site specific frequencies of the 600s time series to be used for the simulations are given in the following table and figure. Due to the lower annual mean wind speed the probability of higher wind speeds is less than used for the design. Therefore the exceedance of the turbulence intensity doesn't not necessary lead to an exceedance of the design life time. The numbers are given for the design lifetime of 20 years.

3.3.4 Wind direction distribution

For the tower and foundation the wind direction distribution is taken into account [4].

Direction [°]	Frequency [%]
0	8.4
30	2.2
60	1.4
90	2.9
120	3.3
150	6.5
180	12.1
210	20.0
240	13.1
270	12.4
300	9.6
330	8.0

Table 5: Wind direction distribution [4] table 6.2

For all directions the damage is calculated. The highest damage is calculated for 210° wind direction.

The contribution of the other directions (0°-180° and 240°-330°) is taken into account.

4 Summary

By comparison of damage equivalent loads of WEC E-70 E4, 85m hub height at site Castledockrell the increase of lifetime is presented.

Since the mean wind speed for the machinery components on site is 13% below design wind speed a life time of 26 years is calculated.

For the tower the mean wind speed on site is 2,4% higher than design wind speed. Taking into account the wind direction distribution, at least the service life of 26 years for the tower can also be verified, most likely more.

Calculated minimum life all WTC components: 26 years

However, the site conditions indicate a higher calculated minimum service life. This could possibly be achieved by partially replacing the blade bolts. Since the rotor blade connection is primarily loaded by the rotor blades' gravity loads at each rotor rotation, the lower average wind speed at the site has less effect here than on other components.

However, the site conditions of the site Castledockrell indicate a higher calculated minimum service life. In addition to the lifetime prediction reported in this report an initial rough assessment of all wind turbine components has been carried out. The outcome of this initial assessment shows that the limiting wind turbine component for the site Castledockrell is the blade root connection (e.g. blade bolts), all other components should have approximately 35 life time years. In case the blade bolts will be replaced by new ones, the life time of the blade root connection will also increase to 35 years or more. It is assumed that this will be the most likely outcome after completing the complete life time extension assessment. Assuming that no major issues and/or shortcomings are identified sourcing this assessment.

As this is a simplified analysis, the calculated annual figures of a complete aeroelastic simulation may still deviate slightly.

These given numbers are lower limiting values!

These numbers are calculated under the assumption, that the components had been designed for exactly the workload of 100% in total of 20 years under design wind conditions.
