Description	Description Detached three-bay single-storey house, built c.1800. Now vacant. Pitched thatched roof. Painted exposed rubble stone walls. Square-headed window openings, now boarded up. Square-headed door opening with timber battened door. Lean-to shed to south-east having rendered walls and corrugated-iron roof. Site enclosed by rubble stone walls and piers, and hedges Appraisal This dwelling is characteristic of the modest vernacular-style house in Ireland, having a thatched roof and being single-storey with a rectangular- plan. It is of a western regional style which includes a gable-end chimneystack. Typically, also, despite being on the roadside, the house subtly melts into the local landscape, this being part of its aesthetic appeal

Description	Description Detached five-bay two-storey former country house over basement, built c.1740, having attic, breakfront to front (south-east) elevation and stairs projection to rear elevation. Pitched artificial slate roof with rendered chimneystacks. Rendered walls, lined-and-ruled to front and gable elevations and roughcast to rear, with plinth. Square-headed window openings with limestone and concrete sills, raised rendered surrounds and replacement windows. Venetian opening to front breakfront, with carved limestone surround having keystone, limestone sill and replacement uPVC windows. Lunette opening to pediment, with limestone surround having keystone and concrete sill. Round-headed door opening with raised tooled limestone surround having keystone, moulded lintel, and replacement uPVC door, overlight and fanlight. House set in own grounds bounded by rubble stone wall having square-profile rubble stone piers and wrought-iron gates. Rubble stone outbuildings to rear, some roofed in monopitched corrugated- iron and others being roofless, in rubble stone-walled yard Appraisal This former country house is typical of those found throughout Ireland and occupies an imposing position in the landscape. Despite its overall grand form, this house retains a modest and understated appearance with subtle detailing, including that to the window surrounds, and a simple symmetrical form. Distinctive features include a breakfront and Venetian window. The siting of the house, combined with its individual form, makes it a distinctive part of the local landscape

Description	Freestanding T-plan Roman Catholic Church, dated 1837, having two-bay nave, single-bay transepts, later three-stage tower built c.1860 to south-east, later porch to north-west, and later single-bay sacristy to south-east. Pitched slate and artificial slate roof with cast-iron and replacement uPVC rainwater goods, and cross finial and corbels to gables. Flat roof to porch and sacristy. Lined-and-ruled rendered walls with string course. Round-headed openings with concrete sills, moulded rendered surrounds and replacement uPVC windows. Tower of cut block dressed limestone to upper stages and lined- and-ruled to ground, having carved cornice to parapet, with cut limestone string courses between stages, and having limestone date plaque to middle stage. Square-headed openings with rendered louvers, timber fixed-pane windows and chamfered sills. Square-headed door opening to tower, with tooled raised block-and-start limestone surround with keystone and replacement timber battened door. Porch to north-west has cut block limestone walls with engaged octagonal columns to outer corners having spherical capstones, and carved plinths, cornices and cross finials. Pointed arch window opening to porch, having traceried timber fixed-pane window, chamfered surround, label-moulding with decorative stops and having quatrefoil details to spandrels. Pointed arch door opening with label- moulding, foliate details to spandrels, replacement double-leaf timber battened doors, and limestone steps. Interior has carved timber canopy to altar end supported on pilasters. Various marble monuments also to altar wall, and carved timber gallery to entrance end. Church sited within graveyard and bounded by rubble stone wall Appraisal This mid-19th century church demonstrates a typical move away from earlier simple forms to a more elaborate T-plan, with later highly structured extensions. Defining elements of these additions include elaborate openings with much decorative detailing. Of particular note is the three-stage flat-topped bell tower which is very distinctive. This, along with aforementioned details, adds to the individual and unique form of the otherwise modestly decorated church, whose roadside location makes it a landmark

Description	Description Ruinous remains of detached multi-period country house, comprising tower house of c.1550 to eastern half having three-bay ground floor and single-bay first and second floors, and later two-bay four-storey block of c.1720 to west having square-plan turret to its east end. Now roofless, ruinous and covered in vegetation. Crenellations to front of later block, machicolations to three corners of tower house. Triple-gabled elevation to north, having rendered chimneystacks with moulded parapets. Rubble stone walls having remnants of early render and with weather-slating to north elevation gables, and with battered east elevation. Square-headed window openings, some with cut-stone sills. Round-headed door opening set in square-headed recess to south elevation, having cut limestone door surround. Round-headed window opening above door Appraisal This structure forms the remains of an interesting multi-phase building, formerly the seat of the Blake family, consisting of a 16th century tower house which has been altered and enlarged at various periods. Menlo Castle was the scene of much high living in the eighteenth and early nineteenth centuries until a disastrous fire in 1910. The entire building was gutted and has remained a ruin ever since. Nonetheless, the remains of crenelated parapets and the scale and mass of the building make an interesting eye-catcher in the landscape

Description	Description Detached four-bay single-storey thatched house, built c.1800. Pitched reed thatched roof having smooth rendered low chimneystack. Painted smooth rendered walls. Square-headed window and door openings having painted render surrounds, painted sills, replacement timber windows and replacement timber panelled door. Smooth rendered wall and hedgerow to boundary Appraisal The low elevation, thick walls, and small openings are typical of the vernacular tradition in Ireland. Once common throughout the countryside and small villages, thatched buildings have become increasingly rare. This example retains its original form and notable features such as its low chimneystack, and is pleasantly presented with painted details

Description	On a raised platform on the crest of a south-facing slope, in the house cluster of An Caisleán Gearr, overlooking the headwaters of the Terryland River. In existence in 1574 when it was in the possession of 'Rolland Skeret' (Nolan 1901, 115). Rectangular four-storey tower (length c.9.3m, width 7.5m) in fair condition: most of southeast and southwest walls are gone. However, sufficient remains to indicate the position of the doorway in southeast wall. The stairwell was in the southeast corner. The ground, first and second floors each comprised a main chamber with a subsidiary one to southeast. A stone vault existed between third/fourth storeys and there is an exit to a latrine chute at the base of northwest wall. A possibly concealed chamber existed beneath the floor in southwest side of fourth storey. Most of the latter storey and the parapets above are gone. All the surviving windows are single-lights with circular, flat or ogee heads. (O'Flanagan 1927a, Vol. 1, 399-400). Also listed as a recorded monument (AH 25)

Description	Univallate ringfort in good pastureland which backs onto a portion of the Galway Racecourse. Visible as a circular modern graveyard wall with large foundation stones towards the base, presumably older than those towards the top. Diameter c.36m on north northeast- west southwest axis. A souterrain (GA082001) is marked on the OS mapping adjacent to or within the boundary of the wall but no trace remains. The interior has been in use as a graveyard since time of 1st ed. of OS 6-inch map. Though still in use for general burial in 1970 (Topogr. Square-headed doorway to inner side of this turret with rubble surround and lintel. Remains of lower rubble limestone gate lodge to west of tower, with openings, now ruinous and overgrown with vegetation Appraisal This gateway, built as an integral component of the Menlo Castle demesne, is an attractive composition and a good example of the high quality of stone masonry practised in the locality. The gateway serves to convey to the passer-by the grandeur of the castle contained within the grounds and is typical of Gothic Revival architecture, although it also appears to contain some late medieval carved stone, probably from the medieval castle incorporated within the later Menlo Castle country house Also AH 41 and listed as a Recorded Monument.

Description	Description Detached three-bay single-storey vernacular house, built c.1800. Pitched reed thatched roof having low red brick chimneystack. Limewashed rendered walls to front elevation and rendered walls elsewhere. Diminutive square-headed window openings having timber framed fixed pane windows. Square-headed door opening having timber half-door. House facing directly onto road with rubble limestone boundary wall at south-east Appraisal The low elevation and thick walls of this house are typical of the vernacular tradition in Ireland. This house has unusually small windows, probably reflecting the size of those generally found in domestic vernacular architecture but not generally enlarged. Thatched buildings have become increasingly rare and the survival of this particularly interesting example, makes it a structure of more than usual interest
